

July 15, 2021

Unifor launches new recovery-based bargaining program, order bandanas to show your support for racial justice, we applaud child care announcements in B.C. and Nova Scotia, pandemic sick days flaws exposed, casinos reopen, National Post journalists reach a first contract, wrong move on trucks, and health care workers rally in Kanata.

 WHAT'S HOT

 TAKE ACTION

Watch Unifor's recent livestream to hear retirement home workers speak out against Chartwell in Kanata.

Unifor is offering locals a chance to order new bandanas based on U.S. civil rights activist James Baldwin's quote: "Nothing can be changed until faced," leading up to Unifor's 2nd-annual Racial Justice Day on Aug. 1, in recognition of Emancipation Day.

IN THE NEWS

Job security, racial justice, health and safety supports are just some of the priorities in Unifor's ambitious new national 'Recovery-Based Bargaining Program' for staff and local bargaining committees to consider in upcoming negotiations.

Now that British Columbia has signed on to the federal child care plan, Unifor is calling on all other provinces to step up. Read our media release on why we need to move forward quickly with affordable child care.

READ MORE

Nova Scotia is the latest province to work with the federal Liberal government on a national child care plan, tailing B.C.'s similar announcement last week. Now, it's time for other provinces to step up.

READ MORE

Unifor condemns Magellan Aerospace's retaliatory and punitive decision to withdraw from Manitoba's flawed Pandemic Sick Leave program.

READ MORE

After suffering some of the longest COVID-related layoffs, Casino workers returned to work this month.

READ MORE

Port Metro Vancouver's plans to download more costs onto truckers is the wrong move and could lead to instability at Canada's busiest port.

READ MORE

Health care workers rally against Chartwell's proposal to cut sick days.

READ MORE

Journalists at the National Post reach a tentative first collective agreement with Unifor.

READ MORE

Unifor Local 4606 members at Northwood, who worked through a devastating wave of COVID-19 at the Halifax long-term care facility, vote on a new tentative agreement.

READ MORE

Nova Scotia healthcare workers beat back concessions and achieve wage gains as new collective agreement is ratified.

READ MORE

 IN CASE YOU MISSED IT

 RESOURCES

Unifor is the union for warehouse workers. Watch as warehousing and distribution workers share what it is like to unionize their workplace. Better wages, seniority, fairness and respect are just some of the benefits of joining Unifor.

WATCH VIDEO

Job security, racial justice, health and safety supports are just some of the priorities in Unifor's ambitious new national 'Recovery-Based Bargaining Program' for staff and local bargaining committees to consider in upcoming negotiations. Download the program and learn more here.

DOWNLOAD